Nixon Makes TV Appeal To the People of Russia

Says Accords Help Reduce Risk of War

By Theodore Shabad

MOSCOW, May 28 (NYT) -President Nixon told the Soviet people in a televised speech today that the memory of the wartime alliance between the United States and the Soviet Union "can serve as inspiration for a renewal of cooperation in the

Ha declared that agreements reached during his summit talks with Soviet leaders this past week had helped reduce the risk of war between the two countries and had improved prospects for a peaceful world.

"As great powers, we will sometimes be competitors, but we need never be enemies," Mr. Nixon

His 20-minute address, telecast "live" from the Kremlin to the Soviet Union and to the United States, gave the citizens of this vast nation their first good look at the American President, who has been carefully shielded from contact with the man in the street during his current visit.

Audience-rating surveys are not taken in the Soviet Union, but the national television network is theoretically capable of reaching 140 million in the population of 247 million,

In an apparent attempt to establish rapport with his listeners, Mr. Nixon opened and closed his prepared address with Russian phrases, made a few folksy remarks and used proverbs and aphorisms, always dear to every Russian's heart.

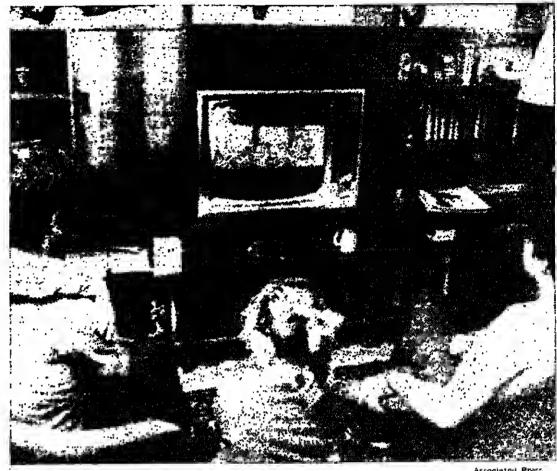

The President's reading of his text was accompanied by a simultaneous translation, with the Russian superimposed on the tuneddown but still audible American voice. The translation was prepared and read by Viktor M. Sukhodinterpreter, who has been with the President throughout his Soviet visit.

The initial reaction of a few Soviet listeners who were ques-tioned after the broadcast was favorable, but some appeared puzzled why the President had not used the opportunity to explain his policy in Vietnam.

The President did not explicitly mention the war in Vietnam, but he appeared to allude to it when he said, "No nation that does not threaten its neighbors has anything to fear from the United States." The United States contends that North Vietnam has been carrying out aggression against South Vietnam. Mr. Nixon spoke from the Green Room of the Great Kremlin Palace, just across a court-yard from the palatial quarters where he has been living during his Moscow stay.

Referring to the inevitable loss of jobs and income to defense contractors, Mr. Laird said:

"We recognize that these aceconomic hardships, but the De-partment of Defense will do everything it can to help alleviate those hardships."

Defense officials said there probably will be some cutbacks in work done by the Safeguard's prime contractor, Western Electric, which has been operating under a long-term pact which contemplated a 12-site ABM system. The Western Electric contract probably will have to be amended modified to reflect reductions in procurement of missiles, radar other equipment, research

The official, whose name has not been divulged, is reported to be a member of the political staff of the Central Office for South Vietnam, known as COSVN, which controls North Vietnamese political and military operations in the southern half of the country. The office's headquarters are said to be in Cambodia. Sources in the diplomatic and intelligence communities here, who confirmed that the report. was made late last week, say that it is too soon to tell how Hanoi will react to the recommendation. They said that it appeared to them to refer to fighting condi-tions south of the Central Highlands and principally around An

While they are confident that the report is genuine, the diplomatic and intelligence sources also noted that past reports of North Vietnamese losses of supplies or willpower had proved to be valueless

In any case, U.S. officials and diplomats predict at least "two or three" weeks of serious fighting in South Vietnam before the issue is resolved either by enemy withdrawal or acceptance of an internationally supervised ceasefire. They see little likelihood of substantial new enemy gains.

Informants here described the content of the recommendation to Hanoi and paraphrased it as follows:

"We are expending ammuni-tion and material at an unprecedented rate. Our losses are heavy and mounting. We cannot continue in this manner indefinitely. Perhaps it would be better to seek a political settlement now while we still have reserves of manpower and equipment to help us maintain our gains."

comparison of the two specches disclosed both etriking resemblances and several major differences reflecting the changed temper of the times.

Both in 1959 and today, Mr. Nixon appeared Intent on persuading his cudience that the United States was indeed dedicated to peace. "Soviet citizens have often ask-

But in contrast to his 1959 remarks, which vaunted the high standard of living in the United States and warned of the threat of Communist expansion, the President today omitted virtually all ideological comment. This seemed in keeping with an apparently tacit understanding that the two countries should focus their efforts on practical political and economic cooperation while acknowledging that basic ideological differences will remain.

In 1959, Mr. Nixon devoted substantial portions of his speech to the personality of Nikita S. Khrushchev, his host, whom he described, for example, as "a selfmade man who worked his way up from the bottom."

'A Chance to Measure' "In our talks this week with the leaders of the Soviet Union," he sald, "both sides have had a coance to measure the length of our strides toward peace and security, I believe that those strides have been substantial and that now we bare well begun the long journey that will lead us to a new age in the relations between our countries."

In contrast to the 1959 speech, which included a call for free flov of information between East and West, Mr. Nixon made only a velled allusion to the Soviet people's not getting full information about the United States in their censored media.

"Most of you know our country only through what you read in your newspapers and what you hear and see on radio and television and in motion pictures," the President sald. "This is only part of the real America." Mr. Nixon ended on an emotional note, recalling the story of to Warsaw for another overnight a 12-year-old Leningrad echool-girl, Tanya Savicheva, during the city's siege in World War II when perhaps 600,000 people died, mainly of famine.

In Leningrad's historical museum are a few torn pages from her notebook, listing the dates on which members of her family died one after another during the terrible winter of 1941-42. The record ends with the words: "All are dead. Only Tanya is left." She was evacuated but died a year later of dysentery.

Think of Tanya'

"As we work toward a peaceful world," the President said, "let us think of Tanya-and of the other Tanyas, and their brothers and sisters, everywhere. Let us do all that we can to insure that no other children will have to endure what Tanya did."

LENINGRAD, May 28 (NYT). -The difficult diplomacy of his Moscow summit behind him, President Nixon yesterday paid a quick but relaxed call on this historic city.

At the Piskarevskoye cemetery. Mr. Nixon placed a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier and then stood for a moment surveying the scene before him: acre upon acre of long, low hillocks, mounds that rise perhaps two feet above ground level and extend for perhaps 50 feet, each containing hundreds of the 470,000 residents of Leningrad who perished during the unsuccessful German siege of 1942-43.

In a drizzling rain, Mr. Nixon walked back to the cemetery entrance, where he saw a picture of Tanya, the 12-year-old girl whose diary records how her family died-by bombing and starvation-one after the other. until only she remained.

Later, at a Mariinsky Palace luncheon given by the executive committee of the Leningrad Council of Workers Deputies, Mr.

"I only hope that the visit that we had at the highest level with the Soviet leaders will have contributed to that kind of world in which the little Tanyas and their brothers and their sister will be able to grow up in a world of peace and friendship among people-all people in the world

Mr. Nixon's reference to discussions with Soviet leaders was his only public mention yesterday of the weeklong talks which produced the historic agreement which he and Leonid Brezhnev the Soviet party leader, signed late Friday evening to limit the nuclear-missile arsenals of the two countries.

Tens of Thousands

The citizens of Leningrad turned out by the tens of thousands -lt was impossible for newsmen to estimate their numbers with any accuracy—to catch a glimpse of the President and his entourage, which included Nikolai Podgorny, the Soviet president.

The crowds assembled in thick rowe parallel to but some distanca from the President's motorcade routes, which carried him from the airport to the cemetery to the guest house where he rested before lunch; to the palace where he had lunch and to the Summer Palace of the Czars outside the city-his last stop before returning to the airport.

At nearly every intersection police held the crowds well back at least a block and sometimes two from the motorcade route. They could see the President, therefore, only in quick glimpses as he went by, but they seemed friendly and curious and waved back when newsmen or members of the presidential party waved

The President seemed relaxed but tired. His aides said he had not gone to bed in Moscow until 2 a.m. following the signing of the arms agreement and a dinner which he gave his hosts at Spaso House, the residence of the American ambassador

Mr. Panov was questioned by police in mid-April on charges of "hooliganism." These are believed to stem from an incident involving his mother-in-law, but his friends claim there is official displeasure at the 33-year-old soloist's desire to emigrate.

MOSCOW, May 28 (WP) -None who experienced it will quickly forget the climax of an improbable diplomatic presentation that leaped between the Kremlin Palace of the Czars: a well-worn diplomatic bargaining room in Helsinki; the American Embassy here, and ultimately the nightelub of Moscow's Intourist Hotel. No one fully orchestrated this prodoction, which dramatized the world's first nuclear arms

In the seductively dim Skylight Room, which happens to be on the hotel's ground floor, between bandstand and a circular, raised dance floor, against a hackground of champagne buckets, President Nixon's inexhaustible security adviser, Henry A. Kissinger, gave the American version of what Mr. Nixon described "enormously important" strategic arms agreement signed two hours earlier in the Kremlin.

Over the nightclub's public address system, listeners heard what must surely have been some of the most unusual statements uttered out loud in the Soviet

Kissinger Humor

The Kissinger sense of humor, leavening the sobering statistics of nuclear warfare and grueling around-the-clock sessions of intensive bargaining here, was on display in an incongruous setting. Pressed by American newsmen to supply hard details on the balance of American-Soviet nuclear weaponry, Mr. Kissinger was saying: "The Soviet Union has been building missiles at the rate I get arrested here for espionage. gentlemen, we will know who is to blame."

To American newsmen based in Moscow, it was astonishing to hear the principal strategic adviser to the American President discussing the level of both nations' nuclear arsenals in a Moscow nightclub.

The nightclub revelation was enticipated by no one, including Mr. Kissinger. The road to it was long, tortuous, and constantly subject to the unpredictable interplay of international developments that reached from Moscow and Washington to the mined harbors of North Vietnam.

It was learned here yesterday from Nixon administration sources that one critical breakthrough to an American-Soviet agreement on strategic arms limitation was reached during Mr. Kissinger's initially secret Mos-cow talks with the Soviet Communist party's general secretary, Leonid I. Brezhnev, April 20-24. In their meeting, which centered both on Victnam and the scheduled summit talks, Mr. Kissinger and Mr. Brezhnev reached basic agreement, it is said, on including a limitation on nuclear missile-firing submarines in a first-stage SALT agreement. The accord was considered a breakthrough for the United States, which pushed hard for submarine limitations, although later new problems were to arise over exactly how the complex submarine freeze would be applied. Simultaneously, the United States and the Soviet Union were sliding toward new tension over the American bomber attacks on the Hanol and Halphong region prior to Mr. Kissinger's arrival in Moscow. That slide toward the risk of a great power confrontation sharply accelerated with President Nixon's May 8 decision to order the mining of North Vietnam's harbors to try the Soviet Union's sec supply line to its allies in Hanoi. American-Soviet developments were heading in exactly opposite directions at the same time: toward high prospects of coexistence, and toward confronta-

In fact, it was so fresh here last Monday, it was expected that no one in the room had a copy to show to newsmen, That produced tumult. Criticism already was being raised in Congress about the stillunseen treaty, especially charges that it gave lopsided submarine advantages to the Soviet Union. "The base number of Soviet submarines is in dispute. It has been in dispute in our intelligence estimate exactly how much it is, though our intelligence estimates are in the range that was suggested." Question "41 to 43?"

Mr. Rissinger: "I am not going to go beyond what I have said. It is in that general range. The Soviet estimate of their program is slightly more exhaustive. They, course, have the advantage that they know what it is precisely." (Laughter).

The briefing was interrupted for the 11 p.m. signing ceremony. The frustrated newsmen watched the three official documents being signed on television. They still had no copies of the "landmark" Later, over 100 weary, deadline-stricken U.S. reporters were assembled to meet with an equally tired Mr. Kissinger in the only available hall, the Intourist Hotel nightelub. As he proceeded through 45 minutes of exhausting questioning, Mr. Kissinger, sleepless most of the past furious week of diplomacy, still displayed his whimsical aplomb and command of detail on a subject that has preoccupied him for years before and since he came to the White No Sprinkling of Levity

There was no sprinkling of levity to ease tension, however, when Mr. Kissinger was asked if "the United States got stuck with a submarine deal." Replied Mr. Kissinger firmly, "that is an absurdity. It is a total absurdity. It was the United States which insisted that the submarines be included... So this is not something that the Soviets forced on us. It is something we urged on the Soviets..."

If this "important first step" in limiting defensive and offensive nuclear missiles succeeds, said Mr. Kissinger, "the future will record that both sides won."

To Eliminate Sonic Boom

U.S. Scientist Developing Asymmetrical SST Wing

By Marvin Miles

MOFFETT FIELD, Calif., May 28.-A radical sircraft wing that pivots at its center as much as 60 degrees to point one tip forward and the other aft may allow future jetliners to fly at supersonic speed without producing a sonic boom. This is the theory advanced by

R. T. Jones, senior staff scientist at the National Aeronantics and Space Administration's Ames Research Center here, credited with development of the swept wing that advanced aircraft into the supersonic speed range. Initial tests, he reported, indicate that a transport with an anti-synmetrical wing rotating at center point could fly about Mach 1.2 without dragging a boom on the ground below, nor would it be penalized by the high fuel consumption associated with supersonic aircraft. "One of the unspoken assumptions in aircraft design," Mr

Jones explained, "is that of bilateral or mirror symmetry and. appears on firm ground.
"Man has an instinctive feeling for symmetry in flight because it agrees with the evolutionary forms of hirds and thus it is natural for us to mold the shape of supersonic aircraft to suit this instinctive feeling. "Nature, however, provide us with a guide for supersonic flight. There are no supersonic birds. Mathematical theory, on the other hand, indicates a completely different kind of symmetry for supersonic alrcraft. "The laws of aerodynamics, in fact, change in such a way-once the velocity of sound is exceeded -as to make it seem inadvisable to arrange the components of an airplane side hy side or abreast in a supersonic windstream ..."

Mr. Jones said that his theory would apply to the horizontal tail as well as to the wing of a high speed airliner, which would have a conventional straight wing and tail at right angles to the fuselage during takeoff.

Less Liftoff Energy

This configuration, he noted, would require only about onequarter the takeoff energy now required at liftoff by comparable delta-winged supersonic jets with similar payloads.

The scientist explained that the wing would be rotated about 45 degrees only after the aircraft attained a speed and altitude at which swept wings would be efficient. Varying speeds could be attained with varying angles of obliquity. The aircraft's engines, Mr. Jones said, would be moved on the sides of the rear fuselage and staggered in such a manner as to permit rotation of the wing alt on the left side without interfering with engine performance. 1 Los Angeles Times

German Terrorist Unit Warns Of 3 Bombings in Stuttgart STUTTGART, West Germany, criminal anarchists who are May 28 (AP) —A terrorist group

called the Red Army Faction threatened today to set off three bombs next Friday in Stuttgart
"as a reminder of the bombing war of the U.S. imperialists in Vietnam." A letter addressed to "citizens in Stuttgart" claimed three autos will be blown up between 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. with bombs made of 30 kilos of TNT. "Therefore, get off the streets windows and go into cellars. Only one hour. The people of Hanoi and many other cities there have to do this many hours each day and still they die," said a photostatic copy of the letter sent to two news agencies. In a telexed message received at the Associated Press Berlin planned bombings was announced. There was no indication from whom the message came nor was there any claimed group responsibility such as that connected to one on Stuttgart received by

The message claimed the following was planned: "2 June 1972, bomb in the headquarters at Heidelberg." "5 June 1972, second bomb in Frankfurt headquarters of the Americans " "7 June, homb in the federal criminal office Wiesbaden." "12 and 13 June, bombs . . . or explosive devices . . . in the Frankfurt airport terminal among the air controllers." West Berlin police said that they believed it to be the first time that such a threat was sent by telex. The Red Army Faction already has claimed responsibility for a series of bombings over the last two weeks against U.S. Army compounds and West German buildings that have killed four U.S. servicemen and injured scores of other persons. No One Should Be Killed The threatening letter, a com-pilation of typewriting and newspaper and magazine cuttings, said, "No one should be killed. The RAF wants to demonstrate that it can strike when and where it wants . . ."

Authorities in this southwestern industrial town of 700,000 people were reported meeting in an emergency session today to plan security measures to counteract the threat. Retaliation Bombings

The RAF claimed in letters to the West German news agency DPA that it bombed the U.S. instaliations in retaliation for American military activities against North Vietnam. The latest letter also refers to the May 19 bombing of the Hamburg editorial offices of conservative publisher Axel Springer, in which 17 persons were injured. "Springer is lying," asserted the letter. "He was warned 31 hours before." Mr. Springer, who has campaigned in his newspaper for police crackdowns on leftist extremists collectively known as the Baader-Meinhof Gang, charged that the bombing came without Chancellor Willy Brandt went

Last-Minute Breakthrough on SALT

Sudden Soviet Concessions Led to Pact

MOSCOW, May 28 (AP).-The Soviet Union made last-minute sions that finally broke up the last block in the way of the first treaty in history to limit nuclear arms, a U.S. source said today. The concessions came 10 hours before the treaty was signed, he said. Until then, President Nixon thought that he might have to leave Moscow without the treaty wrapped up, and he was prepared to leave, the source said. But he added that the President felt confident that within days or perhaps two weeks the last two points of contention would

The Russians on Friday morning softened their stand on the last points, the source added. They then asked that the agreement be signed the same day, he said. The United States agreed immediately because "we thought we had a good deal and we didn't want it to cool." This and other American sources supplied a vivid picture of the last frantic hours which finally, after 2 1/2 years of negotiations, produced the nuclear treaty. The President and his delegation arrived last Monday with four issues remaining unsettled at the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks.

Tuesday night he took up the first two with Communist party leader Leonid I. Brezhnev and, after talks late into the night these were settled. Two to go. Of these, one issue, highly technical but important, concerned the size of missile siles. The other concerned the question of arriving at a formula for trading off nuclear submarines for nuclear missiles, the informants said. On Wednesday night, while other negotiators were working intensely downtown on the last remaining nuclear points, the President went out to Mr.

Brezhnev's dacha in a heavily wooded area overlooking the Mos-

Duke of Windsor: June 23, '94—May 28, '72

By Robert Alden of the New York Times

IN a Paris restaurant a few years ago, a 6-year-old American boy, impressed by the attention that was being paid to a slight, white-haired man with a tanned, deeply lined face, approached the man and asked for his autograph.

The man obliged. "But who are you?" the little boy asked.

The man smiled down at the little boy.

"Well, I could not possibly expect you to remember," he said, "but I was once a king."

Indeed, the man—the Duke of Windsor-had been King Edward VIII of England. He also was the first monarch in the thousandyear history of the British crown to give up his throne of his own free will.

And, in the manner of a storybook monarch, Edward VIII gave up his throne for love.

Eleven months after he had hecome king. Edward VIII abdicated, on Dec. 10, 1936, to marry Walks Warfield Simpson, a twicedivorced dimensions from

In a voice palpably tremulous with sadness he spoke over the radio to his subjects.

"But you must believe me when I tell you that I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duties as king, as I would wish to do. without the help and support of the woman

Worldwide Sensation

Edward VIII had been a king of great popularity. The abdicawhich caused a worldwide sensation, visibly distressed his subjects.

In the years that followed, the duke, who as Prince of Wales had been a romantic and carefree Prince Charming blessed with the common touch, became a rootless wanderer, an ornament of international society, a former monarch whose life lacked visible pur-

As he puttered in the garden at his home in the Bois de Boulogne on the edge of Paris in his visitors noted a look of melancholy in his eyes.

But those who knew the duke weil said that even as the young and debonair Prince of Wales, that haunted look of wishful sadness was there. Even when he was a boy it could be noticed.

That look of melancholy in the prince's eye is something which I cannot trace to any ancestor of the House of Hanover," Lord Esher, a courtier of the regal household, remarked 50 years ago. In his 25 years as Prince of Wales, heir apparent to the British throne, and his sbort reign as king, Edward was a figure of moment in the history of this

His travels in the years between the World Wars embraced the globe. The Prince of Wales was an extraordinarily successful amhassador for the Court of St. James's both among peoples within the British Empire and those was so charged with social change and destructive war that even though every effort was made to keep the British royal family above the play and counterplay of the flow of world events. Windsor, justly or unjustly, became linked with current

The one often repeated story that clouded the career of the king who gave up his throne was that he was involved in clandestine dealings with Nazi Germany. The charge was flatly denied by both the duke and the British government.

After the fall of France, the Germans did plot to try to have Windsor stay in Britain rether than accept the post of governor in the Bahamas. He was to be used as a pivot to bring about ain and Germany on Hitler's terms. In return, the duke and duchess would have been allowed to assume the throne.

The British Foreign Office agreed that heavy pressure had been put on the duke, but "at no time" did he "ever have any thought of complying." He assumed his wartime post in the Bahamas, never wavering "in the loyalty of the British cause." The duke said that he had treated the suggestions of the Nazis "with contempt." There were other reports that as king, Edward sought to curry favor with Hitler. These reports were termed "absurd" by the Nonetheless, the duke had been indiscreet in criticizing the Treaty of Versailles and in suggesting that Nazi aspirations for a Polish corridor to Danzig might be considered. He also paid a visit to Adolf Hitler and Hermann Goering, the Nazi leaders, in the years before the start of World War II. The visit itself was thought improper, and his flattering remarks about his hosts enhanced an impression that the duke found them congenial. The duke always insisted that his visit and his words were misconstrued. From the vantage point of history it can be seen that the 70odd years of the duke's life spanned an era that wrought a particularly profound change in the world. Through it all Edward was, in one way or another, ever were fought. Between the wars there was a period of chaos in Europe. Then a deep economic depression gripped the world.

Those years saw the dissolution of the British Empire and the emergence of the Commonwealth. On June 23, 1894, the day of Edward's birth, his great-grandmother, Queen Victoria, 75 years old, was in the 57th year of her reign. The British Empire embraced a quarter of the earth's surface and nearly a quarter of the worln's population. British sea power and commercial influence were supreme in the

Edward was born at White Lodge, Richmond Park, Surrey, 10 miles outside London, to the former Princess Victoria Mary of Teck, later to be Queen Mary.

The boy's father was the Duke of York, later to become King George V. His grandfather was Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, who was to become King Edward

The youngster was christened Edward Albert Christian George Andrew Patrick David of the House of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha. (George V, on July 17, 1917, renounced the German name of the royal house and preclaimed it the House of Windsor.)

The name Edward had already been borne by six British kings: Albert was in deference to Victoria's desire that all her descendants should bear the name of her husband, Albert of Saxe-Coburg: the name Christian was given out of respect for King Christian IX of Denmark, the father of the newborn prince's grandmother, Alexandra: George, Andrew, Patrick and David are respectively the names of the patron saints of England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

The royal family always referred to the boy as David. Edward passed much of his childhood at Sandringham, in Norfolk, a big red-hrick building with a gray slate roof, which Ed-

Seldom has princely progress been attended with such lavish pomp. On Nov. 18, 1919, HMS Renown brought him to New York for his first visit there. He was accorded a thunderous welcome. Wherever the bachelor prince traveled he was at the center of attention. A slightly built young man with straw-colored hair and good features, he had a shyness of manner that was most ingratiating. His genuine friendliness allowed him to mingle with all kinds of people. He really liked them, and it was recognized early that he would prove a most popular

Speaking in his memoirs of the four voyages that he had made about the world between the ages of 25 and 31, Edward called them "my principal occupation." He

"They took me into 45 different countries and colonies and carried me a total distance of 150,000 miles. In this age of air travel such mileage spread over a period of six years may not seem impressive.

"But when I had finished poking into the corners of the world. I could have qualified as a selfcontained encyclopedia on railroad gauges, national anthems, statistics, local customs and dishes and the political affiliations of a hundred mayors."

Edward had his own word for these activities-"princing." Busy traveler and sportsman that he was in the 1920s, the prince also led an active private life. His liaisons were well known and accepted in British social circles, although there was, of course, no publicity about them. One of the prince's friends, a woman of great charm, was an American, Thelma, Lady Furness.

tionary Force. The Prince of Ernest Simpson. Mr. Simpson, a moderately prosperous maritime broker, was Mrs. Simpson's second husband. Her marriage to E. Winfield Spencer, a U.S. Navy officer, had ended in divorce.

It was a grim, cold winter's day at Melton Mowhray, where Edward had gone for fox hunting. Mr. and Mrs. Simpson were guests in the same house, Mrs. Simpson was suffering from a head cold and since she was an American, the prince tried to strike up a conversation on the lack of central heating in Britain.

As recalled by the Duke of Windsor in his memoirs: "I am sorry, sir," she said, "but you have disappointed me.

"In what way? "Every American woman who comes to your country is always asked that same question. I had hoped for something more original from the Prince of Wales."

Later the duke wrote: "In character, Wallis was, and still remains, complex and clusive, and from the first I looked upon her as the most independent woman I had ever met. This refreshing trait I was inclined to put down as one of the happier outcomes of the events of 1776." The friendship of the pair ripen-ed over the years and grew into love. The Prince of Wales found that he wanted to marry Mrs. Simpson after she obtained a divorce that had been contemplated for some time. Britain knew nothing of all of this. But pictures of the Prince and Mrs. Simpson began appearing in American publications. It was at this point, on Jan. 20, 1936, that the prince's father, my father, the action embarrassed me. I could not bring myself to believe that members of my own family, or indeed anyone else, should be expected to humble themselves before me in this way. "Nevertheless, these two spontaneous gestures served to remind me, however needlessly, that I was now king."

Proclaimed King Two days later Edward VIII heard himself publicly proclaim-ed king by the Garter King of Arms in Friary Court at St. James's Palace, and as he heard the words over the heralding trumpets they "seemed to tell me that my relations with Wallis had not openiy, rebelled. During his reign, Britain passed through the first of the crises that in the end resulted in World War II. Hitler reoccupied the Rhineland.

"Intuitively I felt," Windson later wrote, "that another great war in Europe was all too probable; and I saw all too clearly that it could only bring needless human suffering and a resurgent Bolshevism pouring into the vacuum of a ravaged and exhausted Continent . . . ### 'The Premise'

What Mr. Nixon said to the Soviet people -and to the world-was intrinsically less Important than the fact that an American President could say it on Soviet broadcasting facilities, from the Soviet capital. This is true in the same sense that one could argue that what Mr. Nixon did in China was less important than that he was there. But the physical transference of the American head of state through the Bamboo Curtain and what is left of the Iron Curtain was not mere symbolic gesture. Both journeys, against the background of long hostlity and actual warfare, were political acts of great significance

There are profound differences between the visit to the People's Republic of China and that to the Soviet Union. One was a spectacular beginning to what must necessarily be a slow process of adjustment between the United States and China. The other crowned such a process. It was a return to the high hopes of Yalta, which lingered, at least in the popular mind, through Potsdam, and then went into the swift freeze of the cold war, receded to the point of no return in the missile crisis of October, 1962, and has been slowly returning during the past decade.

The rebirth of hope is not the work of Mr. Nixon alone, nor of Messrs. Brezhnev by mutual suicide.

and Kosygin alone, or even of the superpowers they represent. When East and West Germans meet through gaps in tha wall, it shows that the strongest barriers erected by nationalism or ideology can be at least lowered by common sense. Nevertheless, it is quite probable that the single most influential element in making it possible for Mr. Nixon, with a string of important agreements with the Kremlin leaders behind him, to address the Soviet nation, was "The Premise."

This was stated in the first clause of the treaty on the limitation of strategic arms: "That nuclear war would have devastating consequences for all mankind." This is hardly a revolutionary concept; the world has been painfully aware of it since Hiroshima and Nagasaki. But it required the agony of the missile crisis to force the two nations holding the bulk of nuclear power to recognize it, and act constructively upon it. And from that premise flows much that can give confidence to humanity.

True, there is still the bloody anguish in Vietnam; still the time-bomb of the Middle East. Bot "The Premise" hovers over the world as a warning of the ultimate folly of war and confrontation, and a reminder that there are other ways for men to resolve their differences and aid one another than

The Moscow Summit

Both the American and the Soviet people have good reason to be happy about the developments at the Moscow summit. The gains made go beyond the specific agreemen's that were concluded, notably the historic Nixon-Brezhnev accords on limiting defensive and offensive missiles. More important for the long run may well be the personal contacts between the leaders of the two nations and the positive images of the two nations transmitted by both Soviet and American media to their aodiences. President Nixon underscored this aspect when he told the Soviet leaders at Friday's banquet: "We look forward to the time when we shall be able to welcome you in our country and in some way respond in an effective manner to the way in which you have received us so generously in your country."

Nevertheless, the millennium has not arrived in Soviet-American relations. The deep divisions between the two countries over Vietnam and the Middle East remain unresolved. The Soviet leaders have not surrendered their ideological ambitions. And even as cordiality reigned in Moscow, American planes were pounding North Vietnam. while frantic Soviet efforts were under way to ship still more military supplies to Hanol despite the mining of North Vietnam's harbors. These unresolved tensions were reflected at the summit in the failure to reach concrete agreement on trade and credits, a setback that was partially mitigated by the decision to set up a joint commission to negotiate a comprehensive trade agreement.

The summit and its accomplishments would have been impossible if, on both sides, there had not been a cooling of earlier ideological passions and a new primacy of national self-interest. A key to making this development possible was undoubtedly the new relationship forged last February in Peking between the United States and tha Chinese People's Republic, Mr. Nixon discovered there that it was possible to do mutually beneficial business with even such Communist zealots as Mao Tse-tung and Choo En-lai, a realization that implied still greater possibilities in negotiations with the more moderate Communists in Moscow.

For the Soviet leaders, the emergence of the new-and still ambiguous-Peking-Washington relationship made it a matter of primary importance to improve Moscow-Washington relations. A Soviet refusal to receive Mr. Nixon would have raised the danger of driving the United States and the Chinese People's Republic closer together, perhaps leading to the dread possibility of a Chinese-American alliance against the Soviet Union. It was to prevent such a development that the Soviet doves-against the vigorous opposition of their hawkish colleagues-decided not to make an immediate issue of Mr. Nixon's Vietnam escalation and to go ahead with the summit as plan-

For a stable world in which peace is more secure than it is now, all three great powers must have good relations while the temperature in areas of greatest tension-Indochina and the Middle East-is lowered by accords acceptable to all sides. That desirable situation is still clusive, despite the progress made in Peking last February and now in Moscow. It is encouraging, however. that some of the venom has left Soviet-Chinese relations in recent weeks, while Peking has taken the Nixon-Brezhnev talks more calmly than it took the Eisenhower-

Khrushchev meetings in 1959. President Nixon, aided by both Mao Tsetung and Leonid I. Brezhnev, has improved the atmosphere of international relations. The task ahead is twofold: to continue the progress achieved among the great powers and to utilize the greater warmth that has entered their relations as a lever to bring just and lasting peace to Vietnam and the

Economics at the Summit

Twenty-seven years after the end of World War II, tha motherland of socialism asks the leader of the capitalist world nothing less than to help it extricate itself from an economy of scarcity and enter the great trend to world prosperity. Generally speaking, the United States has everything to gain from such an economic opening. On this point, it is just the opposite of what took place at Yalta, where the two countries mutually locked themselves into their sterilizing zones of influence. Yet this will not prevent them from again dealing the cards of world diplomacy at the expense of third countries, among which it would be unfortunate to find Europe.

Environment Conference

It is beginning to look as if the Stockholm conference on environmental problems will start on Juna 5 without delegations from the Soviet Union and Eastern Europe. Nothing is certain yet, and there have been no recent official statements. Perhaps something will emerge from President Nixon's talks in Moscow. But as things stand at the moment the members of the Warsaw Pact are saying that they will not go unless East Germany is invited to take part in the conference as a full member. If they do not change their minds, or a compromise is not found, the work of the conference will be seriously undermined.

Nixon, Brezhnev and the Spirit of Moscow

By Joseph Kraft

true believer in the theory that stand-offish impersonal relations. a kind of loveless marriage, represented the best way to deal with the Russians. But a week in town has changed that view to the point where the White House flacks have been pushing stories expressing a kind of stilted chumminess between Mr. Nixon and the Soviet party secretary, Leonid Brezhnev.

For better or worse, Mr. Nixon has now entered into personal relations with the Russian leaders. And that development transcends in importance the formalizing of specific agreements.

The best evidence of Mr. Nixon's negative attitude toward matey relations with the Soviet leaders springs from his actions. On every major issue on arms control, on European security, and on trade-Mr. Nixon carefully arranged to approach the Russians from a position that caused Moscow to do the asking.

To put a further squeeze on the Russians he cultivated the Chinese Communists and visited Peking before coming to Moscow. In the same spirit he undertook major bombing of North Vietnam and the mining of its harbors on the very eve of his Moscow trip.

Contrast

The attitude implicit in those actions was made explicit by Mr. Nixon at a White House reception held the night before he left for the summit. At that reception the President contrasted the substance at stake in his Moscow visit with the insubstantial nature of the summit meetings held with the Russians by Presidents Johnson, Kennedy and Eisenhower. Mr. Nixon flatly disparaged the Spirit of Glassboro, the Spirit of Vienna, and the Spirit of Geneva.

But hours after he hit Moscow. Mr. Nixon plunged into a private tête-à-tête with Mr. Brezhnev. That first session was apparently not altogether jovial Even so, the getting-to-know-each-other process continued. The six-hour session Wednesday night at Mr. Brezhnev's dacha outside Moscow made it clear that a certain rapport had been established.

One reliable, high-ranking Soviet diplomat said flatly: "The leaders have taken this affair out of the hands of their subordinates. They are making their own decisions now-without much reference to what was planned before."

On the American side, the halfa-dozen White House spokesmen who were in constant circulation suddenly began switching from emphasis on the arms-length, businessifke character of the negotiations to the sentimental side

MOSCOW-President Nixon of the talks. One story they circame here to Moscow as a culated, which suggests that Mr. Brezhnev had been taking lessons in small talk from Mr. Nixon, had the Soviet leader approach a junior member of the President's > staff. "He looks like a fine young man," Mr. Brezhnev is supposed to have said to Mr. Nixon. "How old are you?" Mr. Brezhnev then asked the staff side. "Thirty-one, sir," the aide replied. "He's a fine young American," Mr. Brezhnev is then supposed to have said, turning back to Mr. Nixon.

> Trivial as that story may sound, it has true importance for the accords signed in Moscow last week. By itself, the signing was not all that important. The documents could have been worked out at lower levels and formalized in more routine ways. The agreements take on special importance precisely because there is a spirit of understanding behind them, a mutual comprehension between Mr. Nixon and the Sorlet leavers that goes beyond aignatures on

Finally, there is the matter of Vietnam. Hanoi is very much its own master, and there was never a chance that Washington and Moscow could strike a deal that would engage the North Viet-namese. ### 'Liberal' Le Monde

With reference to the use by James Goldsborough of the word "liberal" in conjunction with Le Monds (IHT, March 8), the socalled "liberal French daily," unless your definition of liberal means someone who would fight to the death for your right to agree with him, Le Monde might never qualify. No newspaper of which I'm aware (and I'm aware in five languages) practices such refined distortion. For several years now I've mada daily comparisons between Le Monde and several other newspapers; in this time I could hardly fall to note Le Monde's coddling of Socialist states by simply neglecting to report anything that might make them look bad, or reducing it to four lines on Page 25. America and her allies come under continuous malicious attack, meanwhile. Very rarely is more than one narrow point of view represented.

As for Le Monde's general attitude toward America, I would offer as evidence a book written by its foreign news chief (supposedly an expert on us) called "L'Empire Americain."

Don't give the term liberal, I beg you to a newspaper which is blindly opposed to the one country which still makes liberalism possible in this world, a journal which one British newspaper recently called "the central organ of anti-Americanism in Europe.

'Pietà' Photo

In the IRT, May 22, which wa received in Belgium, the picture of Laszlo Toth striking the head of Michelangelo's "Pieta," by the United Press International, showed the face of the statue apparently had not yet heen damaged. I am woudering why the photographer did not take steps to stop Mr. Laszlo. Was it more important to him to get his picture than save the "Pieta"? would seem he could at least have thrown his camera at Mr. Lesslo, which should have deflected his hammering.

We hear much about the irresponsibility of the press. Those taking pictures for the press have a responsibility to humanity first and photography second.

Cornered

There is really no further need. except to satisfy academic or historic curiosity, to either defend or attack anyone's position in the Southeast Asia conflict. Yet it is most upsetting to realize that none of the world's so-called leaders understand that it is simply imprudent and stupid to back other countries into corners, especially when they are higger than the one doing the pushing. Physical, economic and emotional corners without exits are not good places to be in, and those backed there usually react violently.

bankers who say that the shortterm rates are out of step. They say an easy-money policy in the United States has made it unnecessary for the commercial banks to borrow money here while at the same time the Bundesbank's deterrents have succeeded in keeping West German firms out of the market. As

6-Month Upward Trend of N.Y. Stocks Continues Amid New Signs of Business Recovery in the U.S.

By Thomas E. Mullaney NEW YORK, May 28 (NYT). -If the nation's economic engine had been running on all cylinders, instead of functioning with two major ones in an idling state, the impressive business recovery that has already occurred this year would be even more

The two sluggish performer have been business inventories and the country's net export trade-but some sparks of life may soon be emitted by both, according to various reports.

A pickup in these two pivotel areas would complement the upturn under way in consumer spending, business capital investment and government outlays, adding several billion dollars to the gross national product and helping to sustain the ongoing recovery from the 1969-70 reces-

It could also prolong the stock market's six-month upward course, or at least tend to minimize any downside correction. Bot it also carries with it the seeds of potential trouble for both the economy and the markets if it is too exuberant.

The market advanced moderately again last week—to his-torio highs in some stock averages-in response to further encouraging news from the eco-nomic sector and to the psychological benefits of the summit conference in Moscow.

Market Indicators

The most bullish news on tha economic front during the week was the Commerce Department report that the government's composite index of leading economic indicators had risen at near-boom proportions during the last two months. The gain was 1.4 percent in April and 1.9 percent in March.

The danger of increased taxes, tax reform, rising interest rates, higher government spending and tighter controls next year is beginning to worry some of the economic forecasters.

With the economic recovery proceeding well and due to gain strength from the impending rise in inventory-building and net export trade, many economists have recently begun to lift their GNP forecasts by several billion dollars. The 1973 gain, some say, may turn out to be as much as $110 billion, instead of the consensus $100-billion gain predicted at the end of last year.

Trade Prospects

Optimism about the nation's foreign-trade prospects is more hope than reality at the present time. The trade balance is still some time yet, but there are encouraging aspects to it.

devalued, and the initial impact from a currency devaluation is country's trade balance. So it has been with the United States; the nation is receiving fewer dollars for its exports and paying more dollars for its imports. It takes time for demand to respond to the price changes that devaluation brings.

Although this country's exports rose by 6 percent in the first quarter of this year, they continued to lag considerably in comparison with imports, which increased by 24 percent in the

Amex and Over-Counter

By Elizabeth M. Fowler

NEW YORK, May 28 (NYT).—The American Stock Exchange listings meandered through an uneventful week, with the index inching to 27.94, up 0.06 from the week before. Volume slipped to 21,795,600 shares from 22,162,000.

On the Over-the-Counter market, industrial issues closed 144.14 compared with 141.57 a week ago.

Syntex, the birth-control products maker, led the Amex most active list with 334,000 shares changing hands as it gained 1 3/4 to close at 93 1/4. It has been recovering from a price break following a contract disagreement with one of its big customers, Warner Lambert, which has decided to produce steroids on a royalty basis instead of buying directly from Syntex.

The most active issues were not the biggest movers in price by Guardian Industries, in the auto glass business, added 15 1/2 points to close at 129 1/2. The stock has been showing steady strength, perhaps inspired by favorable earnings and a good year

Gulfstream Land gained 7 1/4 to end at 75 1/4 and Wells National Service jumped ahead 7 to end at 26 3/4, apparently influenced by news that it was about to be acquired. In the Over-the-Counter market there were some solid gainers among the industrials. For example, high-priced Tecumseh Products, maker of refrigeration equipment and small gasoline engines, gained 11 points to 179 hid. De Kalb Agresearch added 6 1/2 to close at 79, while Loctite, in the adhesives field, gained 8 1/2 points. Bandag was up 5 3/4 points to 78 1/2. The company is in the tire-recapping business. Banks were a little stronger during the week, with Citizens &

Southern of Georgia moving up from 36 3/8 bid to 38 1/2. Arizona Bank edged up from 27 1/2 to 29, and Shawmut, a Boston holding company, was nudged up to 54 1/4 from 53 1/2. Insurance companies generally showed little change. But ERC added 5 points to end at 35 1/2.

the pace of the economic revival quickens in the United States and Western Europe, they add, the corporate demand for cash will grow, money policies will tighten and the liquidity of the Burotoliar market will be blotted up. Some see this happening fairly soon while others think not before autumn. At the same time, an economic lift means that more of the money available for investment will be flowing into stocks or equity-related bond issues forcing borrowers on the straight bond market to attract lenders by offering higher

In the meantime, with available investment funds attracted by new bond issues and stocks, there is less money available for the secondary market in bonds. After a good start last week, prices on the after-market for dollar bonds weakened. As for volume, transactions handled by Euro-clear last week involved securities with a total nominal value of $204.9 million, down from the $267.3 million in the previous

And it may get worse, statistically, before it gets better. But it should get better eventually perhaps toward the year end or in 1973, certainly. The latest figures showed a widening of the deficit to nearly $700 million last month, compared with nearly $585 million in 3.26 Merch. The April shortfall was the second highest monthly trade deficit on record.

The Rond Market

In the bond market last week, prices showed a strong, sustained advance as investors seemed to become tired of waiting for higher interest rates. Many were inclined to put some money to work at current-or oven lower-

There was also some downward movement in interest rates in the credit markets. Some of the 4.03 major banks cut their rate on loans to etockbrokers to 4 3/4 percent from 5 percent; the average rate of 90- to 119-day commercial paper was lowered in the latest week to 4.4 percent from 4.48 percent, and the First Na-tional City Bank of New York and the Irving Trust Co. both announced plans to reduce their floating prime rates to the 5 percent level, from 5 1/8 and 5 1/4 percent, respectively.

In its general advance last week, the etock market achieved moderate gains in all of the major averages, carrying some of them to new historic highs, at different times. Trading was slightly more active than the week before.

The Standard & Poor's 500stock index closed the week at 110.68, up 1.68 for the period and at a new peak. The New York Stock Exchange composite index ended at 61.38, up 0.84, slightly under its record Only the Dow Jones industrial team.

The Scoreboard

MODESTO, Calif., May 28 (UPI).-Fanie Van Zijl of South Africa won the mile at the California Relays in 3 minutes 56 seconds yesterday for the fastest time of the year in the event while Henry Hines and Rod Milburn turned in fine but windaided performances in the long jump and 120-yard high hurdles. South Africa isn't eligible for the Olympic Games this year, heing on suspension by the International Olympic Committee hecause of it apartheid policies, so Van Ziji is making 1972 a personal mission while competing against the bast milers in the world

He didn't have much of a field to best in the Cal Relays. But given a fine early pace, he pulled away on the final lap to win easily. Van Zijl had previously turned in a 3:56.4 time this year. Hines, a former University of Southern California star, leaped 27 feet 6 3/4 inches to take the long jump while Milburn equaled his world record 13 seconds in the 120 high hurdles.

Hines's leap was the third longest ever but he was helped by a nine-mile-an-hour wind while Milburn performed with a 5A mile wind at his back

The world long-jump record is 29-9 1/2 by Bob Beamon in 1968. Ralph Boston recorded a 27-10 1/4 in 1964

Co-world record holder Bob Seagran won the pole vault with 17-4 3/4 and missed three tries at 18 feet. Seagren and Kjell Isaksson set the world mark of 18-4 1/4 earlier in the week in El Paso, Teras.

Olympic champion Lee Evans caught Vinco Matthews just before the finish line to win the 440-vard in 45.7 seconds. In the 100-meter invitation dash, Madagascar's Jean-Louis Ravelomonantsoa won here for the second straight year. His time was 10.1.

Isaac Curtis, of San Diego State, took the open version of the 100 in 10.2. George Frenn won the hammer with a throw of 231-1, Fred Luke took the javelin with 265-7, and Jon Van Reenen of South Africa won the discus with a throw of World record holder Jay Silvester didn't qualify for the discuss final. Also a casualty was sprinter Denalo Meriwether, who finished fourth in a heat of the open 100 and did not qualify for the final.

'Drugs by Mail' Racket Detected By Rome Police

ROME, May 28 (UPI) .- Police announced today they have uncovered an international "drugs by mail" scheme that made use the mail forwarding service provided by American Express. Police stressed that the tourism and banking organization was ignorant of the drug trafficking in which the Rome mail office of American Express was used to help send hashish from Morocco to the United States and Canada. As police pieced the story together, persons in various cities in Morocco would put small quantitles of hashish or occasionally other drugs into envelopes containing picture post cards. The envelopes then were mailed to customers who had left their forwarding addresses with the American Express office in Rome, The company, ignorant of the envelopes' contents, forwarded them to addresses in North America, police said.

Relying on another strong individual performance from Brucs Collins and their enormoue balance and depth, the Quakers out-distanced their state rivals, Penn State, as well as Villanova and Pittsburgh in a two-day meet that may be remembered more for the top athletes who did not compete.

Penn finished with 53 points. Penn State, with its best showing in recent years, wound up second with 40.

Collins Wins

Collins won his specialty, the 440-yard intermediate burdles, and the 20-yard dash. He joined Bill Rea, the Pitt long jumpertriple jumper, as the meet's double winners. His 212-second effort in the 220 and one-yard victory over Jim Rudasill of Brown confirmed Collins's strength and stamina as he prepares for the National Collegiate championships and United States Olympic trials.

South reached the rare contract of five no-trump on this deal after opening with a "gambling" three no-trump bid, conventionally showing long, solid minor suit and little else. North's bid of four no-trump over four hearts was natural, and South's heart king induced him to try five no-trump over five

An inspired lead of a spade would have permitted the de-fense to take the first eight tricks, but West was looking for a passive lead that would not help the declarer. He chose the dismond queen, and when the dummy appeared, South could count ten tricks.

The chance of an 11th trick did not seem good, considering that West had hid hearts, but South gave it a try by running out his diamond winners. This put pressure on West, who decided that his best bet was to abandon one suit altogether.

He chose to give up both his spades, keeping two hearts and three clubs for his last five cards. South cashed the ace-king in dummy and led a third club. West won with the jack and was endplayed. The declarer's heart king made his 11th trick

The defense would have survived if West had kept three clubs, the heart ace and the spade king, since South would have had to part with a heart from the dummy.

In the replay the auction was quickly over: a weak two-spade bid from East and a jump to five diamonds by South. If West had led a minor suit the play would have followed no-trump lines: West would again have had to save the right five cards. But the defense became extremely difficult when he made the normal lead of the spade king-his partner's suit

East routinely played low on the first trick, and that was that. On any continuation South was in a position to establish a spade trick in dummy by ruffing out

Now, while our negotiators quibble and our planes are again in the air, I've been reading an anthology and an unforgettable book of poems by ex-18-year-old draftees. The anthology by 32 veterans ("Winning Hearts and Minds," First Casualty Press, New York, $1.95), is frankly offered for its anti-war sentiment. Its most accomplished contributor is Michael Casey, whose own book, "Ob-scenities," indeed deserves the Yale Series of Younger Poets Award. . . While most of contributors to the authology have written poems to prevent their own souls from going numb, Mr. Casey has done this and something else as well. He has made expressive poetry from the experience of the un-poetic though by no means in-articulate men with whom he served. Perhaps Mr. Casey intuitively knows the truth of Wal-lace Stevens's apothegm, "In the presence of the violent reality of war, consciousness takes the place of imagination." Not that such "consciousness" obviates imagination: for to express it Casey adopts a bold dramatic and narrative strategy. Its success depends upon his sure ear for speech rhythms, his choice of revealing anecdote, and the economy with which he sketches his characters. Casey has made a sensitive instrument of the very crudities and incongruities of both barracks speech and Army life.

"Obscenities" reads like a contemporary, military "Spoon River Anthology," a "Company Rand this war. Casey accurately catches both the brutality and the banter of the grunts in werthee, their self-protective humor and the inescapable realities against which the self won't be protected. No wonder the President looks serious. Once while a President -not the present one-was showering at a country chub after a round of golf, the suitcase was brought into the showers behind him and he cried, "Get that but-ton out of here! I want a little privacy once in awhile!"

But nobody would take the button away, even though it was the President who commanded it. And when the President saw how close he had come to shirking his legal responsibility—to indulging in permissiveness-he felt so contrite that he gave the button B good shower and toweled it down briskly until it glowed with good health.

The plot thickens further. Hang on. Look over here, and here.

These are the deadly nucleartipped missiles which can bring the holocaust to the world in response to the pressing of the button.

These missiles right here—this one, and this one, and this one -are aimed at Moscow. This one over here, in fact, is earmarked for the Kremlin itself. If the button is pressed they will all rise out of the earth and come down on Moscow, including

Do you see where we are going? There is the President at this very moment. The button is there in its suitcase beside him. The deadly nuclear-tipped missiles quiver with expectancy for the Kremlin. And where precisely are the President and his but-

They are in the Kremlin. The Soviet Communist leaders are looking at the button. See how they try to smile each time it follows the President out of the room. See how the President tries to smile each time he thinks of that very missile which is earmarked for the Kremlin itself. Is this not silly? Of course not. It is very serious. It is the way humans behave. Button, button—wouldn't you like to have a button, too?

The Ghost of Honor: Isadora Duncan

DARIS, May 28 (IHT),-As anniversary parties go, it was a spooky kind of evening. The ghost of honor was that of Isadora Duncan, who if she had not capped her hectic career in 1927 by spectacularly breaking her neck-would have been on hand to celebrate her 95th birthday. The spiritual host was the American dancer's brother, Raymond, who died in 1986 at the age of 92. It was Raymond who began these annual celebrations, about 30 years ago. His and Isadora's followers see no reason to discontinue them now that the Duncans are gone.

It was Raymond, in fact, who gave the keynote speech during last night's gathering at the Akademia Raymond Duncan, on the Rue de Seine, in a recording made long before his death. The faithul had turned out in force: The chapel-like recital room, which holds about a hundred people, was full. Most of them were old enough to have known both Duncans, but there was a sprinkling of young people in the audience. Among the wall decorations was a life-size painting of Raymond, wearing a beatific smile and looking like a very old Indian chief as he strode amid the

The recording was of a speech, apparently impromptu, before an audience; you could hear coughing in the background as Raymond, speaking French with a strong American accent, gave a rambling, folksy account of the Duncan family's history, interspersed with his chuckles. There were four children-"four little devils"-and the family lived in San Francisco. Their father was a banker and philanthropist, their mother a musician. Isadora and Raymond, whn was three years older, became dancers "to escape from California" and from a bourgeois existence. The Duncans came to Paris in 1900 and danced here with some initial success but, according to Raymond, "the Germans were the first to understand us." Isadora, he said, was acclaimed as "a great revolutionary" of the dance. He went on to describe her later triumphs in Rodin and John Sloan painted her, Clemencean wrote articles about her, She danced her own thing; the key word to describe her work, Raymond said, was

Akademia Director

The disembodied voice stopped, followed by applause from the original audience as well as those in the recital hall. During Raymond's half-hour monologue my attention had been diverted by a mysterious object in the center of the stage. This, it turned out, was a rostrum draped with purple velvet and topped with a rose: Isadora's tunic.

Earlier, before the program began, I had been greeted by a july, stocky woman in nun-like clothing. I took her to be a had made the clothes herself a homespun gown and a white, cowl-like headdress. A Frenchwoman, she has spent 55 years at the Akademia. (She would not, however, tell me her age.) She was here throughout the Occupation, and she talked about the day the Gestapo arrived. "We had decided," she said, "to live as though they didn't exist." It was a strategy that worked wonders: The Gestapo, unable to decide how to classify this odd-looking group in homemade gowns, togas and sandals, withdrew in bafflement and never returned. But, despite this victory, wasn't existence difficult for them in the Occupation years? Not particularly, she said. They lived much as they always had: making their own clothes and selling other products of their looms and leather shop. Ten thousand people came to see us." she said, "to learn how to take wool from their mattresses and spin it into fabric for

As for Raymond, in addition to all the standard Akademia skills, he had others, such as designing and cutting his own typefaces, and with them printing such works as his five-act version of "Oedipus." A legendary figure, with his long white heir toga and sandals, he was not only an artist and philosopher but also a man of action. During the Liberation of Paris in 1944, with bitter street fighting in progress, Raymond (then about 70) climbed to the roof of the American Embassy and, amid a hall of bullets from both sides, hoisted Old Glory.

An Ode

The Akademia is at once an artistic seminary, a museum of memorabilia concerning both Duncans and the Temple of R cult. Its goddess is a blithe spirit who became a swinger on a grand scale two or three generations before the term was Among other items in the Akademia's front window is an ode to his sister by Raymond, entitled "All Hall":

She is still running on And we with her Swirling in spirals And with every twist Tightens the chains Ever binding us closer together Lucky for us To have caught the same train-

And to be in the same hour;

It seemed apparent that, for many of those who gathered at the Akademia last night to celebrate her birthday, Isadora lives. That excruciating moment in September, 1927, when her long, flowing scarf got tangled in one of the wheels of a speeding car-that moment never existed.
